Struggling U.S. Economy Affects Flipside Paper Quality, Stimulus Package Put Together

The bleak economic outlook is forcing everybody to make sacrifices. Many have been forced to sacrifice their pride and apply for food stamps, while several DHS students have had to cut back on their monthly texting plans. Just last week, The Flipside had to cut back on both paper quality and ink use so as to prepare for the harsh winter, both economically and for Chicago's crappy weather.

Still, people did not see the move as justified. Kiley Hierl could barely throw up a shot as her picture did not even show. Hierl admitted, "It made me want to puke."

A water polo player started to complain about how their picture did not show, but I never listen when water polo players talk. I just took a big yellow ball out of my backpack and rocketed it at their face.

The thin paper also caused the jumble not to work, which was definitely not the editor's fault.

On the bright side, the Chicago Bulls poor quality paper made The Flipside easier to crumple up when you messed up the Sudoku.

As some Americans sell off their wedding rings to afford shelter, the economy must really be getting bad if a self-funded, small-time newspaper could not afford color. How tragic. The Flipside problem, I mean.

Yet, hope remains, like when a substitute teacher comes out of the darkness and is tricked into dismissing you before the period is really over. The House passed an eight hundred billion dollar plus bail out plan in hopes to give the economy a firm kick in the tucas. It clearly worked, as butts across the nation are stinging worse than the famous toilet paper crisis of '89.

The stimulus package mainly consists of students buying pizza, utilizing the black market, receiving federal aid, and selling things to Rod Blagojevich. No matter how the money is earned, I think we can all agree the only thing that matters is that the paper is back up to Dunder-Mifflin standards.

Rod Blagojevich Top Candidate For DHS Principal Opening

In need of a new job, Rod "the bod" Blagojevich has impressed District 113 administrators with his executive experience. "Money bag" Blag seems to be the perfect fit: he has no intention of staying around for more than a couple years, is very similar to Ghandi (Mandela too), and has TV experience (will be ready for that tough WDHS interview).

Rod "I am really good at baggo" Blago isn't afraid to tell the truth about his interest in DHS. In a voice that makes you want to punch him right in his toupee, "the snitch" Jevich stated, "I see several ways we can expand school chest and make more money, such as bank robberies. DHS should stop wire tapping the phones we take from students. I will also hunt down the rascals that paint triforces on the lunch trays and I'll kill Ganondorf if he rises to power."

When asked what new ideas he had for the curriculum, Rod "my real name is Milorad" Blagojevich coolly said, "I'd get rid of anything based in logic."

"Cardinals Make Historic Comeback To Win the Super Bowl... Just Kidding"

By James Harrison

Yo man, just give me a minute; I'm still catching my breath from that sick nasty one hundred yard run. It was like escaping from prison all over again. I swear, you look at me again and I'll punch you in the face. Then I'll push you down.

Now in all seriousness, Arizona you guys played a great game... for a bunch of losers. You played well enough to win... but you didn't.

I'm just messin'. Warner, that was a solid touchdown pass at end the half. Too bad your grocery bag, grandfather eyes couldn't recognize the three hundred pound dude wearing the other color jersey.

I'd like to thank my great defensive coordinator Dick Lebeau. Ha. I said dick.

That was a fun game. Nothing could top that halftime show, especially Janet Jackson. She wasn't wearing one.

What an awesome catch by Holmes. Now we need to teach him how to speak English. It's understandable though, he went to Ohio State. The Ohio State.

Let me be frank with you all for a moment. Arizona, it's too bad you can't hold on to a lead as well as Mike Ganby held on to me all game.

I just can't wait to watch "Chuck" tomorrow in 3-d.

Hugs and kisses,

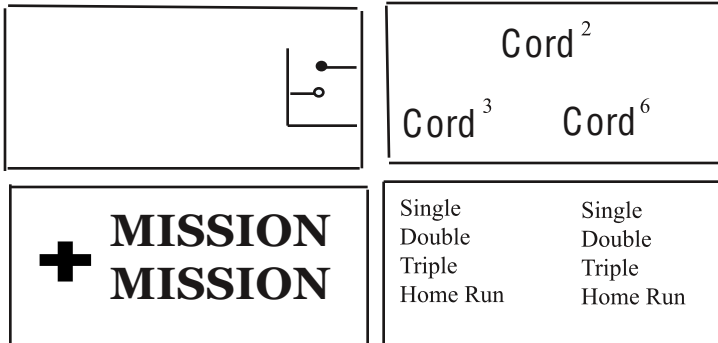

James Harrison
