Elaborate Tattoo Homecoming Set Up Still Leads To Rejection

Deerfield, IL- Homecoming for most is a happy time, but every now and then word trickles down about a sad story like the tears trickle down a rejected kid's face. For instance, Flipside Gossip has discovered that Patricia Hancock rejected Freshman Eric Silverman to homecoming. However, Eric thought he would surprise Patricia by tattooing her name and a picture of her face on his arm with the words homecoming forever etched on his skin. What makes matters worse, Silverman's parents are uber-Jews and it just makes this writer giddy to find out the rest of this juicy story as it unfolds. I'm just schvitzing thinking about it.

Eric is not alone in newsworthy Homecoming screw-ups. In a very sophomoric manner, sophomore Blake Green made a puzzle for his princess.

Unfortunately for the anonymous female, Blake let out his inner-nerd and made a puzzle with over 500 pieces, leading the female to ask out Blake's best friend in frustration.

In an idea so embarrassing it pains me to report, Freshman Cody Flanzer asked Harriet Tubwomen to homecoming through Facebook. Not only did Harriet reject Cody's request to be in an open relationship, she outright refused to even say it's complicated. This was a big blow for Cody, who admits, "I have always been watching Harriet from afar, checking every picture she is tagged in, and talking to her only via e-mail. Honestly, I just didn't see this stab right through the center of the heart coming, leaving me half the man I was before, but now with an irreparable separation in my chest." He went on, but I didn't bother listening.

Homecoming Now Synonymous With Start of School

With Homecoming starting earlier and earlier every year, the meaning of the word is starting to change. No longer does Homecoming symbolize the start of school. Now, Homecoming is literally the coming home for many DHS students. For those who go to camp, it is sometimes tough to get your act together so early in the season. Camper Max Fried admits, "Dude, I barely have my camp goggles off."

Rumors have been spreading that Homecoming in 2010 will be before the kick-off dance and possibly before school starts. Upon analyzing the data, the Flipside can confirm these rumors as truth. Thus, we recommend asking the girl of your choice to both this year's homecoming and next years. You could always ask one girl to this year and another one for next year, but the socially astute members of the Flipside feel that might get a tad awkward. We know awkward.

It sure is difficult to transition from that last paragraph. This tough transition is similar to the brutal first week of Freshman year. With problems already including navigating around school, looking cool to impress the kids you've never seen before, dealing with the tail end of puberty, and figuring out the Flipside is fake news, Freshman must now add asking out a girl to homecoming to their week one agenda. Alas, few people care about Freshman troubles anyway.

Chinese Gymnast Celebrates 13th Birthday, Among Other Olympic Highlights

The Olympics have come and gone, but the memories will last until we forget them. One memory that has some solid staying power was Usain Bolt's epic 400-meter victory. The fastest man on earth, who is not a big fan of effort, power walked a world record 41.6 seconds in Beijing. In typical Bolt fashion he slowed down with 70-meters left to go and "karaokeed" to the finish.

In other exciting Olympic news, Chinese gymnast Yang Wei celebrated her thirteenth birthday. She received many presents, but "none were as super-cool as the big gold necklace I won in the playroom with that cool spring-board." Unfortunately, her parents were not allowed to attend her birthday party as she had to get right back to practicing for the 2012 games, where she will actually be of age.

Probably the most exciting and hyped event in the Olympics, the women's 10m air rifle (40 shots) ended in a sudden death shoot out. Both superstars in their native countries, Qui Jian of China and Jia Emmons, whose country is so obvious it need not be noted. The shootout ended with Jian misinterpreting the rules and shooting Emmons in the face, forcing her to remove herself from the competition due to the lack of a right eye. It was yet another fully legitimate gold for China, who from the opening ceremonies have done everything honestly. Finally, Michael Phelps happened to swim faster than all the other guys in the pool a couple of times throughout the olympic games and proceeded to act like a monkey during his celebration.

Outside of the playingfield, one other Olympic moment made most viewers shout for joy. Fed up with her stupid questions, Aaron Piersol punched Andrea Kramer square in the jaw. This shut her up for almost two days. All of China slept easier and the athletes actually got to celebrate their achievement without that annoying women's pestering.
