DHS Bully Goes To Elementary School; Explains the Tooth Fairy Is Not Real

With Guantanamo Bay shutting down, DHS librarians finally have found a solution to unnecessary library chatter and other shenanigans: torture.

According to chief librarian Ms. Strict, "The library is out of control. I feel the only logical punishment for eating crackers in the library is sending the perpetrator to Guantanamo Bay. No trial is needed, the punishment clearly fits the crime."

At Guantanamo, students learn the hard way about library procedures. Students memorize the dewey decimal system, learn exactly how many pieces of paper they are allowed to print out, and get their voice boxes crushed so as to forever whisper.

It was a bright sunny day. The young [redacted] strolled into DHS, not knowing what to expect. Right upon entering the building a [redacted] got all up in his grill. Quick to anger, the creature [redacted] a security guard right in the face.

Next stop: to the Deans. He passed over the [redacted], under a [redacted], and finally through the [redacted]. No matter, the worst was yet to come.

The entire scene was just like [redacted], only this time everybody died. The [redacted] dean started yelling at the [redacted], causing him to [redacted] his [redacted]. Now the scene was more like [redacted], but likely a little more immature and with even more clever plot twists. On the whole, though, the situation sucked [redacted].

When the dean finally finished his speech, the [redacted] kindly noted that the dean looked like a [redacted]. Not just any [redacted], but a real [redacted]. The dean thanked him for the observation and sent him on his way.

For a while, the rest of the day proceeded normally. The girls looked [redacted], the boys played [redacted], and the he-shes were doing what they always do, which is of course [redacted]. He went to gym, where everybody played the world's great game: [redacted]. Besides for one or two casualties, including a shot to the [redacted] and a minor decapitation, the creature was pleased because he scored twice. He was on top of his game, just like a [redacted] is on top of her [redacted].

Then, out of nowhere, descended [redacted] from the sky, or possibly upper X-hall. The [redacted] was filled with wrath, and its pet [redacted] did not look too friendly either. The great g-d took up its [redacted] and ironically [redacted] right through the heart.

Dying, the [redacted] had some important words to say. First, he admitted, "I did not see that coming. If anything, this kind of anger is more befitting of [redacted] but hey, what do I really know about ancient mythology."

"Make sure to tell my [redacted] mother that I love her. I have always been [redacted]ing, for her. Deep down, I have secretly been wanting to [redacted] her, but only now can I let you know.

My time is short. I see [redacted] floating off in the distance. She looks so [redacted]. The music is playing. Hey, I think it is the theme song from [redacted]! The pain, oh the pain. I pant for [redacted]. Let me end in a couplet: never was there a story of more [redacted] than that of [redacted] and his [redacted].

Librarians Decide To Implement Torture to Guarantee Silence and Order

just getting ridiculous."

Though nobody has seen Joe since he made those comments, many share his sentiments. Before the librarians instituted torture, the punishment for using Wikipedia or Sparknotes was having to sit through a lecture on how to use the Gale Virutal library. Two time offenders had to intensely watch a sixty-minute lesson on all the subscription services and MLA citation. As always, it is three strikes and you're out: three time violators had to join the Book Club.

Still, the librarian's logic is clear. As the world advances, so must their discipline. Just recently, students were spotted using calculators with wireless communication technology. These Ti-CalcuPhones are just another example of students attempting to ruin library utopia.

Even though reading in general has long been considered torture, the physical and moral implications remain to be seen. As rumors swirl about wire-tapping, the QUIET Act (Quiet, Utopia, Inhumane, Extinction, and Torture), and preemptive nuclear warfare, the library is starting to look more and more like a war zone. As students find innovative ways to eat, text, and chat, the librarians are not afraid to play at high stakes. Both sides are going all in. Who is going to fold?

The number of minutes it took to create the madlib. The stupid, stupid program did not come equipped with a madlib creator, which should be a standard feature of any program. Instead, I had to make the boxes, color them, yell at them, and finally space out the words appropriately.

FACT:

Last week, no one who solved the cryptogram approached me during school hours. Fortunately, a brave soul emailed me. Don't assume that by fifth period somebody has won! There are t-shirts to be won; that is, as soon as I get the money to make more of them...

That four day weekend was long enough.
