

This Week In Headlines/Pictures Are For Losers (or Photographers)

Octuplet Mom Short on Food... We All Know What Happened Next	America Ironically Looks Forward to the end of March Madness in the Month of April	Baseball Players Excited For Spring Break, Rained Out Games	Stagewrite Refuses To Accept My Piece Entitled "Stagewrong"
Cocky Senior Convinced Being Waitlisted Just an "April Fools Joke"	Juniors Prepare for Praire State With Janitor Sponsored "Praire Dogging It" Practice	Senior Teach Day Reminds Student Body Why Kids Don't Teach	Big East Tournament To Replace NCAA Tournament
Plain White T's Promise To Become Less Bland: Will Spice Up Wardrobe	Senior Prank Going Great Until Seniors Realize it Would Involve Work, Effort	NCAA Tournament Now With More Sonic Ads Than Upsets	Obama Cuts Medicare, Hopes Senior Citizens Won't Remember
Seniors Tells Faculty to FBSCT	Select Freshman Begin Their Five Year Plan	New Principal Promises To Stay For at Least Two Years"ish"	Sophomore Finally Gets Her License, Now She Can Start Driving You Everywhere
Faculty Up in Arms Over Made Up Acronym		Huge Surprise! Girls Soccer Has Dress Up Day	<small>Many Overlook Small Headline</small>

Boys Are Better

By: A Boy

It is the age old debate, a debate that only recently women are allowed to enter: which gender is superior. Who does g-d love more? (I'm pretty sure he answered that one right from the beginning. At least that is what my right rib is telling me. Or is that my sister talking?) In any given category, men simply have the balls to win.

Let's also consider who g-d decided should sit on the sideline for months at a time, completely out of commission. That's right, women. A man cannot have a child simply because we cannot afford to have men out of the workforce for that long.

In the toughest tests of endurance, it is said to "take it like a man," not "take it like a woman." If we took it like a woman, us stronger gentleman would have to cry when in pain, play sports at half speed, and learn to not eat on a regular basis. No, we take it like a man.

Let's think of famous authors. Shakespeare, Dickens, Faulkner, any Greek author... Hey, at least some of those men were nice enough to have a couple girl characters. I'm pretty sure the wise Shakespeare did not trust girls enough to play the role of a girl. No fear, Shakespeare, a man can do a better job of playing a woman than a woman. I'm looking at you, Dustin Hoffman in Tootsie.

I know something girls might be better at: fashion. They have Yves St. Laurent, Ralph Lauren, and Calvin Klein. Oh wait, those are all males.

Girls do have beautiful voices. I mean, let's think of the world's best music. You got the Beatles, the Rolling Stones, Queen (no girls in that band, despite its name), Pink Floyd, and how could I forget: Hilary Duff.

Remember this historic election when a woman became president? No? Well, that's because a man won. Again.

Speaking of historical, does it bother you that it is significant the first time a woman does something a man has done years, if not centuries, ago?

It's a man's world. Those of you on the moody, menstrual cycle side, just be happy you're living in it.

Girls Rule, Boys Drool

According to a recent study from Australia, "Girls are 92.4% more likely to get into uni and end up making a lot more money." Sorry, no offense, but it's true. Along with these findings, it has also been statistically proven that boys are 74% more likely than girls to develop bacterial infections that would otherwise be eliminated by even semi-regular use of soap.

When questioned about his thoughts on this statistical fact, Bam Slock offered no defense, instead abandoning the integrity of his entire gender by admitting that, "Seventy-four percent seems a bit low." Not only are boys dirty, but apparently they also lack loyalty.

Science, invented by Marie Curry (a woman), also favors females. Biology teacher Evan Joy commented, "It is interesting that natural selection has worked out so poorly for males. No matter how many generations of human beings come and go, boys still smell like crap."

In a pathetic attempt at dissing girls, Stu Minkus, a particularly scrawny, pitiful excuse for a human, notes most directors are male. But Hollywood, named after a girl and a tree, is dominated by gorgeous females. Minkus fails to realize that this display of disloyalty (male directors casting pretty females, and not males, as the primary attraction) is unavoidable. Males cannot "sell sex" because they aren't good looking enough.

So boys are not only uglier and weaker as a species than girls, but they also aren't even smart enough to come up with good reasons for why they don't suck. Boys are smelly (just consult the boy's locker room), ugly (see: Michael Jackson), weak (Minkus), and not as smart as girls. Plus, girls get to take credit for Latika (Freida Pinto) from Slumdog Millionaire, arguably the most gorgeous human being ever to walk the planet. Alex Miller, male traitor, said, "I love Latika. She is the best thing that ever happened to this world. I hate people who don't love Latika." Finally, the article about how boys are better was written by a raging sexist.

Another study from the U.S. found that, "Frankly, boys are 98% worse than girls." No offense.

My cry for my calculator proved ineffective. I should have known the thief was illiterate.

