As the Autumn Season Bids Adieu, We Glimpse Ahead to the Things We Most Look Forward To This Winter

By Elijah Brisk

It is now mid-December. The leaves have all fallen, the temperature has dropped (drastically!), and the first snow has fallen. People are wearing two fleeces, and there is a constant mob around the cafeteria entrance as students struggle to get the last gyro. As I sit here today, I feel I must give my readers the pleasure of knowing all they have to look forward to this winter.

Ask Mr. Motzko

Dear Mr. Motzko.

I am lonely and allergic to almost everything. I really want a pet but it can't have fur, scales, or feathers. My parent's said I could get one if I found one that met these guidelines, but so far I've had no success. Do you have any ideas for a really non-traditional domestic pet? I'm really open to anything.

Sincerely,

Pet-less in Pasadena, Texas

Dear Pet-Less,

While I do understand the nagging malaise that accompanies the knowledge that we are ultimately alone on this fragile rock, hurtling through space with no destination, I fail to see how you can offset said emotional freight with a hamster. Watching him toil on his wheel like a miniature Sisyphus, one would think that you'd be crushed on the anvil of irony. To

1) The mornings when you realize that there is no snow day, even though there was a good chance for one. Then you realize that you didn't get an ounce of your homework done because you were counting on having no school.

2) The mornings when you realize that you have a snow day, and can make snow forts and have snowball fights and drink as much hot cocoa as you can. Then you remember that you did all your homework last night because you didn't think it would be a snow day, and had to finish two papers and study for a calculus test.

3) The awkward family get-togethers for the holidays. So you go up to your third cousin, who you see maybe three times a year at best. Hug? Handshake? Neither? Do not fret, my child, for you are not alone. These are the questions paining millions around the country at this time of year. And, to put it frankly, there is no right answer. Whatever you end up doing, it will still be just as awkward. So, go into it with an open mind. Try out the fist bump, or even a salute! You never know - They may just decide to walk away without saying a word, allowing you the chance you had been waiting for to snag some of that spinach dip before it disappears!

suggest the pointlessness of pet ownership is heresy to the domesticators and enslavers of nature's denizens. Frankly, the line of picketers around Chez Motzko is already ten-deep. To ameliorate the masses, if I must recommend an insensate companion, make sure that said pet is A) unique B) able to defend your property C) able to outlive you and D) edible.

To the second point, consider that behind defense, we spend almost as much money in this nation on pets. Somehow I doubt that old Rex is going to keep the Viking hordes off my doorstep (again). Third, make sure your pet has the ability to outlive you. How many tear stained shirts do I have to burn, courtesy of "Where the Red Fern Grows"? Avoid the childhood trauma of burying a pet (or worse, burying a pet alive) through the careful selection of a long-lived companion (e.g. Joshua Tree).

To the last point, a simple gravy can be made with flour, salt and any former best friend.

Hot Girl Likes Books

By George Minkowski

DEERFIELD— As the old adage goes, never judge a book by its cover. Though we at The Flipside recommend judging books by their covers (i.e. The Color of Water), Junior Courtney Haber is a special exception. Those familiar with Courtney describe her as being "like, really hot," but she wants to make it clear that she is more than just a pretty face. She also likes to read and stuff.

"Thank you so much. Yes, I know. I'm really pretty, but that's not the way I want to be remembered at this school," Haber told The Flipside in an exclusive interview, "I'm really so much more than that. I like books and homework and learning."

"I even read The Da Vinci Code all by myself," Haber added, "and I kind of understood it."

The young Eleanor Roosevelt can be found in the front row of her classes, busily taking notes and asking questions that she really wants to know the answers to. Her backpack is full of spiral notebooks and heavily annotated required reading material. Some would call Courtney a brown-noser, including her teachers. Others, such as her close friend Tiffany, contest that Courtney "just, like, really loves to learn."

Regardless of her confessed book-worm tendencies, Haber continues to attract the attention of many male students at Deerfield High School. "Oh, uhhh... I was just stretching my neck. My bad," stammered sophomore Carl Ashcroft after making awkward eye contact with Haber during English class, "Yeah, uhhh, I used to hate nerds, but Courtney made me realize that there's more to a person than the way they look or dress. But right now it's hard for me to think about anything other than OH MY GOD SHE IS SO ATTRACTIVE."

Whether color-coding her history notes or printing a ten-page study guide for a reading quiz, Courtney Haber strives every day to both excel in her studies and make you feel
